

Rowing

DIVISION I

Highlights

Virginia Rowing Wins Program's First National Championship: Second-seeded Yale rowed to a start-to-finish I Eights victory and Virginia captured the team title on the final day of the NCAA Division I Women's Rowing Championships May 30 on Lake Natoma.

Yale, which had the fastest semifinal time, completed the 2,000 meters at the Sacramento State Aquatic Center in 6 minutes 24.76 seconds.

Virginia (6:25.75) was second, followed by Princeton (6:27.06), California (6:27.60), Stanford (6:31.30) and Southern California (6:34.21).

With its fourth place in II Eights, second in I Eights and dominating win in Fours, Virginia claimed the team title with 87 points. California finished second with 82, followed by Princeton with 76. Defending team titlist Stanford was fourth with 75.

It is Virginia's first team title since the NCAA began the women's championships in 1997.

Despite heat and semifinal winners both clocking 6:16 times, the I Eights final, the concluding event of the three-day regatta, was about eight seconds slower. "We knew we had to get out to a fast start," said Taylor Ritzel, Yale's senior captain. "We knew Princeton would be right there, and if we could get out quick, then we just had to row our race."

Rowing into a headwind, Yale moved to the front, with the top four boats rarely changing positions and finishing less than three seconds apart. "It was very different today; we definitely felt the headwinds," said Ritzel of the Bulldogs' inside lane. "Our coxswain always calls out the times after each 500 (meters), so we knew it was slower."

Yale had the best times in each of the first two 500-meter splits, and California posted the fastest mark for the third split. Virginia had the fastest final 500 meters, but Yale's consistency prevailed.

"I definitely thought for us it was best to key on Princeton," said Yale coach Will Porter, whose Bulldogs won the I Eights title for the third time in four years. "They're so fast out of the start and can dictate a race. We wanted to go with them."

"When it's a race like this when everyone is even with speed, there's really only one way to do it. You have to assert yourself and really push it."

In Fours, Virginia claimed the title in 7:07.98. The Cavaliers dominated this portion of the regatta, posting the fastest time by at least five seconds in each race. California (7:13.18) was second, followed by Wisconsin (7:13.72), Southern California (7:14.87), Brown (7:18.49) and Washington (7:19.31).

"It was a great regatta," said Washington coach Bob Ernst, completing his 37th season. "Women's rowing has come a long way. This is first-class stuff out here. The Yale crew that won the varsity race, that was just awesome."
